Teaching Notes:

 Cynthia Shell ,

Your primary sources that reveal children at work and at school during the same time period will certainly give students a chance to look more closely at those two perspectives. Have you thought about adding some primary sources for children at play? Carolyn Bennett who was the Teacher in Residence at the Library last year has posted a beautiful album which she called Songs for Children to Sing and Dance and Play. <https://tpsteachersnetwork.org/album/52668-songs-for-children-to-sing-dance-and-play>

'Child labor was widely practiced until a photographer showed the public what it looked like.

The 1900 US Federal Census revealed that 1.75 million children under the age of 16, more than one in five, were gainfully employed. They worked all over the country in cotton mills, glass blowing factories, sardine canneries, farms, and even coal mines. In an effort to expose this exploitation of children, the National Child Labor Committee hired a photographer to travel around the country and investigate and report on the labor conditions of children.

Lewis Wickes Hine photographed and interviewed kids, some as young as 4 years old, and published his findings in various Progressive magazines and newspapers. Once the public saw the plight of these children, state legislatures were pressured to pass bills regulating labor for workers under the age of 18, effectively bringing an end to child labor in the United States.

GAMES PLAYED BY CHILDREN.JPG

Teaching Notes:

This group of young boys in a Bain News Service photograph only needed a piece of chalk and their game pieces to create their impromptu game of checkers on a New York City sidewalk. All the world's a gameboard, it would seem!
