LA PRENSA. [VOLUME], NOVEMBER 02, 1919, IMAGE 11

Teaching Notes:

Ofrendas or altars are an important part of honoring someone who passed in the last year. It should have elements of flowers, light, food, drink, salt, incense, and papel picado. Photos and a resting mat are also often included in 20th century ofrenda. States that have large populations of people from Mexico tend to honor Dia de Muertos.

GHOST STORIES IN SONG

Teaching Notes:

In the early to mid-20th century, ethnomusicologists traveled throughout Appalachia "collecting songs." These were ballads and rounds brought with early immigrants from Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and England, that became integral parts of daily life in Appalachia. The songs and tales often have a moral or message in them.

HALLOWEEN PARTY AT SHAFTER MIGRANT CAMP, CALIFORNIA

Teaching Notes:

"In 1935, the Resettlement Administration (RA), and later the FSA, began to establish migratory labor camps to house the destitute migrants. Many migrants living in cars, tents, and shacks along "ditchbank" settlements were attracted to the sanitary, newly constructed camps located along a 600-mile-long corridor through central California... One of the first such camps [was] constructed...at Shafter, California." -- The Living New Deal
